ENEMA SYRINGE

RRP £12.99, but just £9.95 from
Bizarremag.com/sexshop

One of the worries that prevents folk from freely indulging in the wonders of anal action is panicking that their partner may poke a piece of poo. Fretting that you're going to leave skidmarks on the sheets, deposit a dingleberry on your playmate's finger or willy, or shit yourself during a bum-based session are common worries. Giving your colon a quick cleanse with an enema syringe before you get busy can swill out any brown beasties, and allow you to relax. It can also be more predictable and safer than taking laxatives, and some people use enemas during S&M play to test how long they can keep liquid in their bowels.

But what liquid? There are many 'enema recipes' on the net, involving everything from coffee to probiotic yoghurt to herbal tea, but for newbies, Bizarre recommends you stick to room-temperature filtered water. Slick the syringe nozzle with water-based lube, take things slowly, and make sure you have the bathroom to yourself!

MIDGET GEMS

Priceless little snippets of curious news...

Angelique's new book! Dutch artist and tattooist Angelique Houtkamp, whose images we were buzzing about in Bizarre 153, is holding an exhibition of new work at Nelly Duff gallery in London on 4-6 March. The show is called Bona Drag, which means 'nice outfit' in Polari, the slang used by 19th century criminals, circus folk and prostitutes, and later by gay men and Morrissey.

YOU TOLKIEN TO ME?

Following the success of his One Man Star Wars show in 2006, Canadian actor Charles Ross is now touring the UK with his new act, One Man Lord Of The Rings. Using a pair of elbow pads as his only prop (what, no Horn Of Gondor?) Ross races through the entire Middle-earth trilogy in 3,600 seconds. It looks like he's making a hobbit of these one-man exploits...

SKIN AND BONERS!

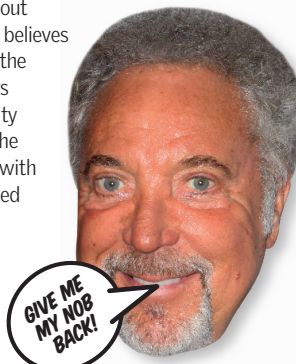

It's always great to see a large-scale kink night taking place somewhere other than ruddy London, so Bizarre are looking forward to the second annual Skin Two North Fetish Ball on 20 March in Leeds. Hosted by our own Alix Fox and her unstoppable gob of doom, the event has an 'Alice in Fetishland' theme, with burlesque performances, fashion shows, and a dungeon filled with more equipment than the power tools section of B&Q. This year, there's a Wonderland Fetish Fayre taking place during the day, too, so you can pick up some bargain nipple skewers and bollock-squashers.

WHAT'S NEW PUSSYCAT?

Keep your eyes peeled for a new film from Wales, A Bit of Tom Jones. It's about a bloke who buys what he believes to be the severed penis of the 'Delilah' crooner, and enters the murky world of celebrity body-part trading. Along the way he has a bubble bath with a horny OAP, gets kidnapped by adult babies, and fights a gorilla. Go to the film's website to enter a draw to win a bloodstained towel from the set. It is unusual.

SHOCK AND SAW

Thorpe Park's new horror-film-themed 'Saw Alive' maze opens on 14 March. It's extreme: during testing, over 100 volunteers were given electric shocks to "determine a safe level of electrocution that members of the public can be exposed to as part of the attraction".

PINDEMONIUM!

It's the 10th World Pinhole Day on 25 April: a celebration of the creative images that can be captured using something as simple as a cardboard box with a small hole in it. And who doesn't love a small hole? Check out a gallery of pinhole shots and learn how to make your own camera at Pinholeday.org

MODEL BEHAVIOUR?

The finals of the second annual UK children's beauty pageant took place on 23 January. It's called Mini Miss & Little Man, and we've already heard worrying reports of British six-year-olds being given USA-style spray tans. The pageant was filmed for a BBC documentary, so get ready to scream at your telly (again) soon...

INTRODUCING... JASON ATOMIC

THE ONLY REASON JASON ATOMIC HAD an office job in the late 1980s was so he could "surreptitiously rape the photocopier to reproduce weird, hand-drawn comics with titles such as Wongo Batonga". One of his porno cartoons became a free insert inside a CD, Volume by Godzilla, and the images were so explicit that the release got a parental advisory sticker. "The record's cover actually became part of the set of EastEnders for a while, on the Albert Square music stall," Jason laughs.

Far from dwelling in Walford though, Jason's spent many years as an illustrator and clothing designer in Japan, and the country's influenced him hugely. "I was in Kobe when the Great Hanshin earthquake struck 15 years ago, and in Tokyo when terrorists released nerve gas on the subway trains – but neither disaster had as much impact on me as the amazing Japanese 'style tribes' I met there," he explains. "I hung out in Harajuku, sketching cosplayers, visual kei crowds and cybergoths, and it helped me realise that drawing real people could be more interesting than drawing stuff I'd made up. I vowed to focus on life-drawing and seek out unusual social scenes."

Jase has developed a technique of dashing off ballpen sketches of people, which he later develops into oil paintings. In 2008, he attempted to set a world land/speed record for drawing portraiture at London's National Portrait Gallery. "I did 42 sketches in an hour – everyone from trannies to body builders to pirates, finishing with a picture of my muse, alt.model Honey Manko," he grins. "Sadly, Guinness World Records told me they couldn't verify my title."

Damn. But Jason's latest projects sound even more exciting: "Last year I was recruited to 'infect' random packs of official Star Wars Galaxy 4 trading cards with collectable hand-customised versions; my Galaxy 5 editions are out this month. I've also published books called One Honey Of An O and Wank Rag – the latter is printed on grubby old bed sheets."
